

Breaking the Silence

JOURNEYS OF HOPE

This compelling one-hour documentary on domestic violence aired nationwide on PBS stations. Now it's available to be shown to community groups throughout the country — and at a price low enough for any group's budget — just $9.95 plus applicable tax and a $3.95 handling fee.

“Breaking the Silence: Journeys of Hope” is told through the stories of abuse survivors. The result is riveting. In their own words, they paint a vivid picture of the causes of domestic violence, the painful experience of it and the programs that are providing support to women in the difficult transition to safety and to personal independence.

Each copy of the video comes with a detailed facilitator's guide prepared by the American Bar Association. The facilitator's guide helps clarify domestic violence issues and options and will help you whether you show the video to a community audience or to an audience of lawyers, social workers and others who help battered women. The guide offers an overview of the film, tips on developing programs and questions for discussion.
